

Scott Linda Johnston McDougald

The partnership between interior design firm Postcard from Paris and architectural firm Johnston Design Group is anchored by a shared commitment to quality and results. The two firms, both leaders in their respective fields, take a collaborative approach with every project, ensuring a seamless and full experience for their clients.

Scott Johnston says wellness, economy, and ecology drive his every decision to create environments inspired by our clients' visions.

"When I started this business, I never thought my studio would make electricity from the sun to run all of our computers and printers. The best thing about my work is knowing I am having a positive impact on the world I am leaving to my kids."

Linda McDougald shares that commitment to deliver the most comprehensive and satisfying experience for her clients.

"It makes my day when a customer says that they are happy with our work beyond all

"There are no vacant lots in nature."

—Edward Abbey

expectations. A day at work for me is like an extremely fast moving, intense, high energy experience that inspires me to do it again."

Both possess unsurpassed expertise in sustainable design and techniques, enabling them to incorporate elements of healthy and responsible living to their designs.

"Brad Wyche, executive director of Upstate Forever, once told me that movements don't just happen, says Johnston. "He said they happen because of the courage and hard work of pioneering visionaries like the Johnston Design Group. It was the very best thing a customer ever said to me about my business."

People might be surprised to find that such a focused man doesn't even own a watch, but not so much that on a day off he will most likely be found in the mountains.

And as for McDougald? She says we might never guess that she considers her ability to surround herself with "individuals who are more talented, more intelligent, and more passionate" than she is to be the key to her success. Time away from work means "time spent with my boys enjoying the quality of life the Upstate provides for my family."